

Falterboy

Falterboy is the musical alter-ego of Jeremy “Buff” Schantz — a Michigan-born fantasy-loving, D&D-rolling kid who grew up to become a Tampa frontman with a guitar, a story, and a pair of very worn-in Chuck Taylors.

His sound blends emotionally heavy, sharply honest lyrics with upbeat, high-energy indie-rock and pop-punk spirit. It’s music built for anyone who’s ever felt out of place, fought their way forward, or learned to laugh in the dark and keep moving anyway.

From drumming in his first Florida band to stepping into the spotlight as a songwriter and vocalist, Schantz brings a raw sincerity and a fiercely human sense of connection to every show. Whether he's on a small stage or under festival lights, he performs with the heart of someone who still remembers discovering magic in music for the first time.

Falterboy is less about perfection and more about resilience, story, and community — crafted for people who want to feel something real.

Promotional Quotes:

Mp3hugger blog

“A song with a feather in its cap and a fire in its belly. The good times are certainly being profligated and we are all invited along for the ride. The arrangements are loose but move in unison to heighten the sense of grabbing the moment to leave convention to the side for a few minutes. The hoarse vocals suggest the party has been in full swing for quite some time, thanks for the open door policy..”

“‘Vinetree’ has a smart blend of indie-style lyricism with offbeat & personal descriptions in the words that project solid imagery into our imaginations as we follow along. Musically, ‘Vinetree’ keeps the energy up and genuine sincerity in-check...I’m a big fan of songwriters like these guys that can tell a story that mentions a versatile amount of specifics in the lyrics and still have it come out as an idea we can all somehow relate to in some way,”
